

Use Personal Development To Create Wealth and A Life By Design.

As you sit there and begin the last subchapter of this book, you may be wondering after all this talk of personal development and success - how can I grow and develop into the person I want to be, in order to spend my working time on my life purpose, and have the things I want?

Recently, many people have begun to realize that they can create wealth by using personal development as a business opportunity.

Years ago, the idea of "starting a home business" was not one that was widely accepted. It was "risky" and, while not frowned upon, it definitely wasn't something the average person considered a viable option. The attitude for most people was that success meant a comfortable job that offered long-term security. You worked hard all your life for someone else, provided for your family, and then retired.

Although there is nothing wrong with this mode of thinking, to say that most people have this view in 2008 would be wrong. As we have seen, corporate America has drastically changed. It no longer provides the security people came to depend on.

More and more people today understand that owning their own home business to create wealth is what enables them to live the life they've always dreamed about.

More than ever people are discovering their entrepreneurial spirit, and it's a number that is constantly growing. Perhaps you have been dreaming for years about starting your own business, and living a life of freedom, filled with choices?

People don't want to be "stuck" in one job any longer. They want an opportunity to learn and to grow. Folks want fulfillment and freedom. They want a life that lifts them up instead of making them feel chained. Most of all they want a lifestyle that accommodates their family's needs and their desires.

You have probably heard from others that one of the advantages to owning your own business is the fact that you're your own boss. There's no one looking over your shoulder and no one telling you what to do. Gone are the "office politics" and trying to "impress the boss". You have the freedom to make decisions based on what you think is right.

When you're the boss you've definitely got a completely different life than working for corporate America. Be careful, however. This lifestyle is extremely addicting, and you'll be loath to ever go back to regular hours once you've had a taste!

And as one works their business, the increased self-confidence that comes along with that responsibility is amazing. Until you're in charge and calling the shots you can't even imagine what it will do for your self esteem. It's definitely empowering to be out on your own.

You can also take time off when you want to do things that are good for you or spend the day with your family. Many people feel the urge to go into business for themselves because they're looking for more flexibility in their life. The rigid life of 9-5 takes a toll, and especially once a woman has children those hours become even more unbearable.

The income potential is also another big reason why people go into business for themselves. New stories come out every day of entrepreneurs that have been creating wealth and abundance with their businesses, and hearing those stories is enough to make anyone want the same thing.

The following quotes are from a book called The Next Millionaires by world-renowned economic forecaster, Paul Zane Pilzer.

"The direct selling community is a group that often picks up on trends long before the rest of the world has noticed them."

"The individual entrepreneur today is often far more competitive than the big corporation."

"Home-based businesses are one of the fastest-growing segments in our economy".

"Paul Zane Pilzer predicts that by the year 2016, there will be 10 million new millionaires in the USA alone, with other countries having similar statistics, and that the majority of these new millionaires will come from the direct selling industry."

Working from home is certainly less stressful: you don't have to drop the kids off at day care, or sit in traffic (unless, of course, there's a nasty bottleneck on your way upstairs to your office, but how many times does that happen?).

You don't have worries of down sizing or out sourcing. As you can see there are many great benefits to owning your own business.

If creating wealth is part of your dream, then one of the only ways to do it is to work for yourself. You surely won't get rich working for someone else. With opportunities like network marketing right at your fingertips it's easier than ever to start creating wealth and abundance right out of your home.

Personally, the development of technology has allowed me to participate in a global business from the comfort of my home or as the case a few weeks ago from the comfort of the ocean side.
