

Crystal Chandeliers – Getting The Effect You Want And So Much More

If you're looking for a home decor that would add flair and sophistication to any part of your house, then crystal chandeliers may just give you what you yearn for. A crystal chandelier truly holds the power to transform any space and make it convey the guise of elegance and stylishness.

A traditional design may put in a vintage charm to a dining area, while a contemporary one may supply a fashionable appeal to a living room. Yet in spite of the aesthetic allure of such decors, you have to keep in mind that they're more than just pieces of nice-looking fixtures. Crystal chandeliers definitely offer more than mere beauty. They also provide a wonderful source of lighting. For that reason, when planning to purchase a crystal chandelier for your home, you certainly need to consider the kind of illumination effect you want to achieve.

Lighting Effects

1) Accent Lighting

Contemporary crystal chandeliers with down lights and spotlights are the most excellent designs that can help you pull off an accent lighting effect since they are capable of illuminating specific objects or sections of a room. Down lights have the capacity to accentuate tabletops or other surfaces, while spotlights are utilized to draw out the beauty of exceptional artworks.

2) Ambient Lighting

If you were aiming for ambient illumination, it would be best to choose from a wide range of large chandeliers that feature numerous bulbs and open lights. This variety will surely light up an entire section of the house, provided that you choose one that bears a size that's proportional to the room's dimensions.

3) Diffused Lighting

A lot of people find the intensity of bright lights a bit unpleasant and instead decide to utilize diffused lighting in their homes. Crystal chandeliers with up lights are effective in achieving soft illumination. Rather than putting up with the uncomfortable glare, the chandelier light will simply bounce off from the walls or ceilings—depending on where the light gets dispersed—and emanate a warm glow.

The Total Wattage

Traditional crystal chandeliers are usually designed and intended for dining rooms. When shopping for one, try to consider how the lighting will influence the entire dining experience. Chandeliers that give off bright illumination directly onto a person's face will consequently cast unappealing shadows and produce annoying glare. In the same way, bare light bulbs that shine down from a chandelier that's been hanged too low can disturbingly warm up the dining area.

To get the best outcome in an average-to-large sized dining room, look for a crystal chandelier with a total wattage of 200 to 400, irrespective of the number of light bulbs it holds. In addition, choose only the appropriate intensity for the bulbs and constantly adhere to the rules of picking out the right crystal chandeliers.
