Taking Care Of Baseball Gloves

Baseball gloves are necessary for all the players. It is important to protect your hands from injury. It also helps you get a good grip on the bat and the ball. Therefore, baseball gloves are an important part of the game. To keep the gloves in proper shape, you need to take proper care of the gloves. New gloves are usually stiff. If you do not take proper care of them, the extremes in temperature, dirt, and mud will affect the leather and it will start showing signs of wear and tear. You need to condition your new gloves to soften them. Conditioning protects the gloves against sun, heat and water. Avoid using oils on the gloves. You must use conditioners that are either pastes or lanolin based. Oils will clog the pores of the leather and as a result, the gloves will crumble.

Before the season starts, you must examine the lacings of the gloves and replace the broken laces wherever required. You also need to clean it and condition it. You must not allow the glove to become too dry. While playing if the glove gets muddy and wet, then you must clean the mud and allow the glove to dry by itself. Avoid putting it inside the oven. Also, avoid putting it out under the sun. Let it dry indoors. After the season gets over, you must try to keep the gloves as clean as possible. Scrape off all the dry mud and grime. Repair the broken laces and keep it ready for the next season. You must store the gloves in a cool and shady corner.

By following a few basic tips, you can keep your gloves looking great. Proper care will ensure that the leather maintains its color as well as texture. You must bear in mind that baseball gloves are quite expensive. Therefore, if you want to save the expense of unnecessarily buying gloves every season, then you must take proper care of them. Besides, playing with old gloves is more comfortable. New gloves are usually stiff. So every time you lose an old glove, it would mean you have to play the next game in new stiff ones. So maintain your present gloves diligently. They will keep you comfortable and help you perform better with every passing season!
