About The New York Rangers

The New York Rangers are an ice hockey team that is based in New York City. They are a very old team in the National Hockey League scenario. They are also one of the groups of teams that are considered as the Original Six. The New York Rangers play their home games at Madison Square Garden. The New York Rangers were the Cup favorites in the mid 1990s to late 1990s.

In the past the biggest rivals for the New York Rangers were the New York Americans. Both the teams played their home games at Madison Square Garden. Thus a rivalry emerged. As a result even today they played very intense games with each other. In fact for quite sometime, the games between New York Rangers and New York Americans were the most popular matches and the tickets were in tremendous demand. Both the New York Rangers and its arch rival the New York Americans met at least 94 times in the period between 1926 and 1942. Both the teams had put up an equally tough fight.

The New York Rangers were a very classy team. The press often called them the "Park Avenue Rangers". In contrast the media titled the New York Americans as the "Bowery Americans".

The Rangers have always loved publicity. Even in the past, the equation was clear to them. The more publicity they got, the more the tickets were sold. Thus, you will notice that veterans like Johnny Bruno and Willis (Jersey) Jones were far ahead of their rival equivalent Joe McGregor in terms of publicity. The Rangers made it a point to gain publicity wherever they could.

By the time the World War II approached, the Rangers had more fan following than the Americans. Most of the American fans were defecting to the Rangers. This was so as the Rangers, unlike the Americans, were making playoffs every year. In the season of 1941-42, the Americans disbanded. That was the end of one of the most publicized rivalry of the early National Hockey League.
