

How magic can control your mind.

We all have seen mind control trick or show in our lives. This act of advantage of one guy over another seems to fascinate us and magically draws us closer to the TV or increases our interest of what is going on, on the stage.

There are many ways to control minds of people and magicians probably use them all. Their work is about being amazing, so they have to make sure people won't spoil their well planned trick. How? They have to make them do what they want. And that's what this article is about, how do they put a spell on audience and participants making them do what they want.

The most obvious way to control people is by giving them subliminal cues. This can be achieved either by right body movements and posture or sophisticated language patterns that put you into light trance and allow mind controller to make you do almost anything.

Body movements and posture are often underrated part of human communication. If you will keep in mind that words are barely 7% of what you say, it is obvious that you need to be more than careful about what you say nonverbally.

Signs, we use them all the time. The most popular sign, that uses the middle finger is understood all over the world no matter what language you speak you know what it is about. But they are also great way to pass subliminal info. By making right gesture or pointing on something, you can pass message more powerful than 15 minutes of speech.

It is especially liked by so called mentalists as they can make unnoticeable hand movements that send you the right cues. The best body language user I've ever seen is Derren Brown, most of his tricks are based on sneaky subliminal body persuasion.

Language is the second most important skill for mind controller. If you can't talk for hours about anything you won't be good at this work. As I've mentioned before, magicians usually use complicated language patterns that contain subliminal messages supposed to make you do what they want.

And again we have to mention the statistics as tone is 38% of communication content. Just after body language with 50% and words 7%. So you actually can say complete gibberish while keeping right posture and using good tone and you will be understood perfectly. It pretty much shows why magicians love this so much, they can talk about some BS while giving you instructions on subliminal level.

The last thing I would like to mention are patterns. Magicians know your psychology in detail it's their work. What are the benefits of it? Best way to understand it is by example. Choose one number between 1 and 4; do it now. Most people will choose three, does this prove I have unnatural abilities? Of course not but it shows clearly that with statistical knowledge you can be ahead of almost anyone.

In short, the only advantage magicians have over you is deep understanding of human behavior. They know exactly what you will think and do in given situation before you. But is it really so important? They use their skills to entertain us so enjoy their mastery.
