People conduct a criminal records search for different reasons. Do you find yourself needing to do one as well? Thus far, these are some common reasons to conduct such a criminal records search.

You have gotten to know someone online via an online dating service and want to meet the person but feel unsure and unsecured. You need some kind of assurance that the person you are meeting is not a crook or swindler.

You are looking for a babysitter or nanny for your kid and want to check out the background of the person. This would put your mind at ease.

You are entering into a business contract with a business associate and want to be sure that this person you are dealing with is not a crook.

You wish to hire someone to work in your company and want to check out your applicants to see if they have past criminal records.

Free resources to search criminal records

One such resource is Search Systems. It has one of the largest free databases and you can carry out advanced searches there according to location and category. It allows you to find criminal records in US, Europe and Canada.

Another resource is the National Sex Offender Registry. As a parent, this is useful to you. You can check out a new neighborhood that you are considering moving into to see if it is safe. You will be able to see the alert notices on missing children as well as receive alerts regularly.

Naturally, free resources have their limitations. The databases may not be comprehensive and complete unlike paid services. Thankfully, you need not even leave home to do a criminal records search anymore. These paid search services can be found online. They practically can give you the criminal records you are looking for as well as other detailed information such as birth, death, marriage, divorce, court, civil, bankruptcy records and even the residential address and phone number of a person. Basically, you can check the background of a person thoroughly.

There is another option which is to hire a private investigator to do the job for you. But needless to say, in most cases, you need not go to such length and spend that kind of money to do so when you can easily and conveniently conduct a criminal records search at these paid services.
