

The Frustrated Realtor Alternative in a Down Market

San Jose, CA February 25, 2008 -- A meltdown has been underway in the Real Estate market that has never been seen before and is devastating thousands of Real Estate Brokers and Agents checkbooks.

Most realtors are frustrated and disappointed after working longer hours and trying harder to eventually make less money. The housing market (and prices) has been cut down to the bone in the midst of the buyers' inability to obtain funding. This is causing many Realtors and Mortgage Brokers to go in search of a new revenue stream.

Prices will sink even deeper. When it comes to housing, 2008 will be one bleak house scenerio. The Real Estate Professionals who stay in the game continue to fight for every last listing as property sales continue to drop out of escrow. The times have changed and the outlook is a very long term turnaround, which most real estate professionals cannot survive through the storm.

Total home sales are at their lowest levels since the National Association of Realtors started tracking the numbers and inventory is now the worst ever on record!
